commercialization of the product. In the workshop, where everything is strictly and meticulously controlled, the artisans of the Santomiele aim at building the character and the excellence of the product. Antonio Longo tells how the family business grows contributing to careful land protection.

VARGAS BUILDING VATOLLA

SANTOMIELE'S company was resuming what was the family tear in the tradition and redefining become our passion, was not only transform it, aiming at excellence, the figs, which are strictly selected, sun-dried and carefully handmade. Master craftsmen work for us, and everyone of them has his own work-table and a limited production. History is inherent in our land. The tradition is in the craftsmanship and in the respect of the past. The style is in the choice of the raw material, always top quality. We are faithful to the style although we are always reinventing the product to seduce and surprise. Another key to our success is the strong connection with the territory, which we preserve and grows steadily. Disregard it would be a mistake which might turn the business strength in infertility. In fact the company is the interpreter of a local reality and a really strong cultural identity, plunging their roots in a very ancient past which, however, has still a lot to tell. We went back to basics in a strongly mediterranean spirit; perfumes, flavors, colors: these are our key words. We want our products to celebrate the land of the myths.

TERROIR of the Santomiele figs: they are grown in a hilly environment, in a very small district of the Cilento delimited on the north by the ancient city of Paestum, on the south by the greek city of Velia, on the east by the the carbon mountains of Giungano and on the west by the tyrrhenian sea .The hillsides where the plant is present are generally exposed to south-west at an average altitude of 100metres-400mt above the sea level on land belonging to the rock formation “flysch”, alternation of clay and sandstone.

T E R R O I R

The FIGS that we use belong to the variety “cultivar dottato”, widespread throughout all the South. In particular, the product is that derived from a specific ecotype of the “cultivar Dottato”, that has been selected and distributed only in Cilento. The product has unique characteristics of absolute value; the pulp has a typically pasty consistence, very sweet, amber yellow, with mostly empty achenes, small and with an inner body almost entirely full. The color of the skin of the dried fruit is pale yellow and acquires a brownish color when the fruit is worked, according to the ancient Cilento's tradition, with a slow baking process in the oven. This is a crucial stage both for sterilization and for the richness of the specific aromatic components.

FIGS MONDI, MMUNNATI OR PEELED

Figs “MONDI”, also called “mmunnati” or peeled are considered the best. They have very small seeds, sweet taste and ivory white color. The fresh product best suited to peeling is that of first production. The figs must be mature to the right point and possibly collected in the morning, at the beginning of the dawn and no later than a few hours after sunrise. The “right point” is the maximum expansion of the fruit recognizable by some vertical lesions of the peel of the fruit itself. Historically this product was born in the village of Prignano Cilento, which also gave birth to the “Capicollo of figs mondi”.

IL CAPICOLLO DI FICHI AI PISTACCHI

CAPICOLLO OF FIGS WITH PISTACHIOS: soft paste of figs, sweetened with fragrant roasted almonds and green pistachios grain. Excellent as a dessert if combined with an aged marsala or with an agricultural rum.

THE MEDITERRANEAN DIET

The Mediterranean diet, considered "Intangible Human Heritage", whose main promoter was the American scientist Ancel Key, provides a high consumption of bread, fruit, vegetables, herbs, grains, olive oil, fish and wine (sparingly) and dried fruit. Dried figs are rich in antioxidants such as polyphenols, the same substance found in grapes or wine. Polyphenols, through their antioxidant activity, contribute to the good health of the arteries.

LE CANNETTE

CANNETTE Figs with almonds and citrus peel, with walnuts and wild fennel. The name is linked to the canes of fiumara, harvested in January, dried in the sun and cut into several parts, used as a package.

Pairings: with cheeses such as Castelmagno or Blu di Moncenisio, with wines such as Caluso passito or Moscato passito.

IL FAGOTTINO

Cooking figs in the leaves is the oldest cooking method that men has ever known, it dates back to Egyptian, it's a technique that Santomiele uses and continues to experiment; in this way the figs preserve their softness and acquire an intense flavor of undergrowth.

Along with honey, maple syrup, the fig molasses is one of the alternatives to white sugar (sucrose). It provides about 30-40% less calories (in fact, it produces 235 kcal per 100g) and has a good concentration of mineral salts (calcium, magnesium and iron) and traces of vitamins (group B and PP). 100 grams of molasses contain on average: iron 11 mg; potassium 1,500 mg; magnesium 90 mg; calcium 500 mg. The high concentration of calcium makes it essential in bone diseases, rich in iron is useful for overcome the weakness. Heated it stimulates the lazy intestines and develops expectorant capacity.

LA MELASSA

MELASSA is obtained by pressing dried figs in the sun. The extraction process is very long and delicate: once the molasses has been obtained, the refining process is carried out only in particular climatic conditions. The organoleptic and healthy features are those of the Mediterranean diet, the aromas are those of caramel, the licorice and of hay.
